

Exercise 1- My MySpace

Objective: Write an HTML document and style it with a CSS file.

Remember MySpace? Me neither. Even though it was a little before my time, I always loved the idea of having your own web page that evokes your own personal flair. As a result, I want you all to design your own personal website that mimics the purpose of a MySpace page (it does not have to look exactly the same, just serve the same purpose). There are some key requirements listed below. Please fill the content with interests, hobbies projects (whatever you would like), but aim to make it as true to your persona as possible. You may also use this as a virtual resume piece, but spicier. On page two I have listed some examples to frame your webpage. Starter code is provided, please do not change the file names.

Core Requirements:

Your html document must include:

- Head tag with:
  - Link to CSS
  - Key Words
  - Author
- A heading
- A table
- A list (ordered or unordered)
- A paragraph tag
- An image
- A link
- An iframe to another webpage/video
- Use a div and span tag

Your CSS Stylesheet must include:

- Each of the following selectors:
  - 2 class selectors
  - 2 ID selectors
  - 2 Descendant selectors
  - Adjacent Sibling Selector
  - Child selector
  - Each selector must have at least 3 style declarations (i.e. color or font size)
- A colored or pattern background for the entire page

Note:

All selectors must style a specific, unique element. For example, your class selectors must style two different classes that exist in your HTML. All in all, you should have 8 selectors styling at least 8 different parts of your HTML page.

Examples on next page for inspiration, yours does not have to look like that as long as it hits the requirements
